

Jazz Queen Visits Maryland

(by the Associated Press)

Josephine Butcher, the toast of the Paris stage, has returned for a brief visit to her roots.

Miss Butcher, who turned heads with her famous "fruit bowl" dance (which inspired a line of high-couture fashion) is back in the U.S. to research a new routine. "My grandmama told me ghost stories when I was little," she says. "I want to build an act around folk tales and 'haints.'"

The ebony enchantress has been turning heads throughout her home state, and a parade was organized in Baltimore in her honor.

For a long time Adolphe Menjou has been on the outs with Paramount over the terrible stuff in which he has been asked to appear. He didn't care for the stories flung his way, nor was he particularly partial to the directors that went with them. For a while Paramount seemed to turn ears his way that were pretty tightly stuffed with cotton, if not cement, but the moment has arrived when the picture-producing concern has at least hardened to the pleas of the picture star and it has been decided that none other than Ernst Lubitsch will direct the debonair fellow in his next movie, to be known as

"the Prince Consort."

Here, think we, is a great combination and we sincerely hope the picture itself is a worthy medium for them to labor upon.

Don't Miss Greta Garbo who has attracted favorable comment with her performance in "A Woman of Affairs." We have heard praise of her work in this latest picture from all sources.

Yet it is men who claim that they find the lack of beauty in their wives harder to live with than nagging, temper, nerves, extravagance, bad housekeeping, any of the sins which one might reasonably suppose could wreck matrimony. It is men who only too often offer an excuse for their infidelity the fact that their wives have got old and worn in their service and are no longer pleasing to gaze upon. They seem to think that they have the same right to trade in their old wives for new just as they do their automobiles.

ARTIFICIAL WAVES

There are times when you must take advantage of every means, artificial or otherwise to make yourself attractive. It's the same with artificially waved hair. The hot iron is not good for the hair, it cracks and dries it. It does not actually burn it. It's much easier to give yourself a water wave with comb after a shampoo.

Straight hair is very pretty and youthful, but wavy hair does make a tired face look less so.
