

Calvin Worthington - Fact Sheet

You have a somewhat shadowy past. You came to town about five years ago from parts unknown, and worked at a number of odd jobs. You were eventually hired as a butler by a social climber who wanted to put on airs, and used that position to wangle similar jobs in several wealthy households.

Those jobs dried up when you were arrested for murdering a former employer. You were released for lack of evidence (they didn't find enough of the body to make a case), but facts which came out about you during the trial conferred a definite unsavory air. You were working as a bouncer in the sleaziest speakeasy in town when you heard that the Count and Countess Von Blucher, newly arrived from the continent, were having trouble hiring help.

The house they have inherited has been abandoned for years, and it has such an evil reputation that even hobos refuse to sleep within its walls. However, you don't believe in ghosts, and you're broke, so you applied for the position of butler. They were grateful to take you.

The Von Bluchers haven't yet taken up residence in the house; their first night spent there--and your first day of employment with them--will be celebrated by a housewarming party they're giving for the cream of society.